

THE DATABASE

Do you want to know more about theatre buildings in Europe? In the free online database www.theatre-architecture.eu you can find information on more than 350 European theatres, including a rich visual documentation. The number will grow continuously, and by 2016 the database will present all historic theatres in Europe.

THE EUROPEAN ROUTE

The European Route of Historic Theatres expands every year. Watch it grow and try the Nordic Route that takes you to unique historic theatres in Sweden, Norway and Denmark. Go on holiday in the south and visit the oldest theatres in Europe plus some very special private theatres on the Italian Route. See theatres mostly from the 18th century on the German Route. And enjoy historic theatres in Belgium, the Netherlands and the UK on the Channel Route.

Opening in 2014: the Adriatic Route and the French Route. The Emperor Route is organized by the Arts & Theatre Institute, Prague. E-mail: erht@theatre.cz

More information on the various routes on the Internet: www.europeanroute.info

PERSPECTIV

PERSPECTIV – Association of Historic Theatres in Europe – is the coordinator of the European Route. The non-profit association connects people across Europe who are responsible for historic theatres or who else have a professional or private interest in this topic. Together we support the preservation, restoration, and adequate use of as well as research into this very special common European heritage.

THE EUROPEAN ROUTE PROJECT

Theatre has been a corner stone of European culture for over 2500 years. The buildings created for this art mirror our history. They can be found everywhere in Europe. Together they form a very special part of our common European heritage.

The “European Route of Historic Theatres” was initiated in 2007. It proved to be an excellent idea for travellers and theatres alike, and the European Union agreed to support its extension to all of Europe until 2017. Sixteen partners from twelve countries are joining their forces to achieve the following goals:

- conduct research and present the first ever online database of all still existing historic theatres in Europe;
- select the 120 most interesting and best preserved theatre buildings and connect them on one continuous cultural tourism route across Europe;
- create a travelling exhibition that presents this heritage in context.

Every six months, a new part of the European Route will open, until the European Route will be complete in 2016. The database is extended continuously, also to be completed in 2016, whereas the travelling exhibition will be on show from 2015. Also part of the project are frequent meetings and an annual international conference.

Historic Theatres

AUSTRIA,
CZECH REPUBLIC

The Emperor Route connects the most interesting historic theatres in the Czech Republic and Austria – two parts of one state during the Habsburg Monarchy.

The route starts in Graz, a city with two major historic theatres. With the beautiful building of the Opera (1899), we are being introduced to the work of the Viennese architects Ferdinand Fellner and Hermann Helmer. They built more than 40 theatres throughout the Monarchy and Germany between 1870 and 1910 and thus became synonymous with the theatre architecture of this period. Also in the city stands the Playhouse. It opened in 1776, was rebuilt in 1823 and saved in the 1960s – a mosaic of three clearly defined styles.

The rich theatrical life in Vienna is represented by the Theater an der Wien (1801) where many important events in Austrian theatre history took and still take place. Further up the Danube, we find the oldest preserved bourgeois theatre in Austria, the theatre in Grein, built by local amateur actors in 1791. Near the border with the Czech Republic, the palace theatre (1885) in the Fürstenberg's castle at Weitra introduces us to the world of private aristocratic theatre that had been spreading from Vienna to palaces in the whole Monarchy.

The Emperor Route continues in the Czech Republic with a wealth of these aristocratic theatres. A real jewel is the castle theatre (1768) in Český Krumlov, preserved in its original state, including the ready for use stage machinery, stage decorations, props and costumes, all from the 18th century. In the Renaissance palace of Litomyšl we find the second oldest palace theatre (1798) as well as a collection of stage decorations created around 1800 by Josef Platzer, the famous Viennese theatre painter. Kačina palace, built 1806–1822, is one of the most beautiful Classicist buildings in the Czech Republic, complete with a palace theatre that opened in 1851, whereas the palace theatre in Mnichovo Hradiště owes its existence to a meeting of the three emperors of the Holy Alliance in 1833. Here, too, a large number of original equipment and costumes have been preserved.

The grand finale of the Emperor Route is the oldest operating professional theatre in the country, the Estates Theatre (1783/1859) in Prague, a symbol of the rich tradition of Czech and German theatre in the 18th and 19th century.

HISTORIC THEATRES IN AUSTRIA AND THE CZECH REPUBLIC

ČESKÝ KRUMLOV

Castle Theatre

The majestic castle complex, part of the UNESCO World Heritage Český Krumlov, has its origins in the 13th century. A castle theatre was built already in the 17th century, during the reign of the Eggenbergs. It was remodelled completely by Prince Josef Adam Schwarzenberg in 1766–1767 by mostly Viennese artists. One of the oldest historic theatres in Europe, it has been entirely preserved in its original state, even including the stage machinery and lighting, stage decorations, props, costumes and the theatre library, all from the 18th century. Following extensive restorations, it reopened for the public in 1996. Every year, some very few performances in the original style offer the opportunity to experience Baroque theatre in the authentic environment. The theatre is open to visitors every day as part of a guided tour.

GRAZ

Opera House

The Graz opera house is one of the most beautiful opera houses in Europe. On the Emperor Route, it is also the shining example of a theatre by Fellner & Helmer, the famous duo of architects during the Austrian monarchy who built nearly 50 theatres. Inaugurated in 1899, the opera house features feudal foyers in the style of Fischer von Erlach and a splendid auditorium that combines Italian boxes with French balconies. Although it seats 1200 spectators, everyone is close to the action on stage. About 200 performances are offered every year, ranging from opera, operetta and musical to dance and concert.

Located at the popular Emperor Josef Square just off the historic city centre, the opera house is the perfect starting point for a tour of the UNESCO World Heritage Graz city centre and Eggenberg Palace.

GRAZ

Playhouse

A theatre like a mosaic of 250 years: the playhouse opened in 1776 as “Estates Theatre”, supported by the estates of the city and the region. The facade still dates from this period whereas the interior was destroyed in a fire in 1823. The classicist auditorium dates from 1825, when the rebuilt theatre opened again. It is the only preserved example in Austria of an Italian style theatre (with boxes up to the ceiling). In 1964, after refurbishment, it opened for the third time—this time with foyers and staircases from the 1960s. The auditorium had been overhauled, too, and now every visitor can test whether he can see what is 1825 and what is 1964. The productions on stage are clearly from our time, as one can find every other day.

GREIN

Historic Municipal Theatre

The Municipal Theatre in Grein on the banks of the river Danube is the oldest preserved bourgeois theatre in Austria. Enthusiastic amateur players installed it in the city granary in 1791 for their own productions and for touring professional troupes. Access is through the adjoining old town hall (built around 1563), today a museum, complete with the historic jail from which the convicts had a good view of the action on the stage. The theatre has also preserved the original seating in the stalls area where each seat could be locked by the subscribers to prevent other people using it. In summer time, plays are being performed by professionals during the “Grein Summer Festival” (Sommerspiele Grein), whereas the amateur actors show their productions in November. Also worth seeing are the historic city centre, the gothic parish church and Grein Castle.

KAČINA

Palace Theatre

Kačina Palace, one of the most beautiful Classicist buildings in the Czech Republic, was designed for count Jan Rudolf Chotek by the German architect Ch. F. Schuricht in 1796 and erected in 1806–22, with additional designs by J. P. Jöndl. The castle theatre is located in a pavilion at the end of the north wing, together with an unfinished castle chapel. The theatre, too, remained incomplete for a long time and was inaugurated only in 1851. It hosted performances of amateur actors from the count's family; Count Rudolf Karel Chotek was also the author of some of the plays. From this period, the richly decorated auditorium, part of the stage machinery and some stage decorations have been preserved. The theatre is accessible as a part of the guided castle tour.

LITOMYŠL

Palace Theatre

Litomyšl Palace, a UNESCO World Heritage, was built in 1567–1581. Two successive palace theatres operated in the 18th century before the still existing one was inaugurated in 1798. Members of the noble Waldstein-Wartemberg family and their friends performed popular high comedies here for the next 50 years, for their own pleasure as well as for the local audience. The theatre has been preserved entirely, including the original stage machinery and lighting equipment. The unique collection of stage decorations created by Josef Platzer (1751–1806), the imperial court painter who worked for theatres in Vienna and Prague, is on show on the second floor of the palace, together with rare musical instruments. The theatre is accessible as part of the guided tour of the palace rooms.

MNICHOVO HRADIŠTĚ

Palace Theatre

The enchanting palace of Mnichovo Hradiště acquired its present form in 1697–1703. In 1833, the reigning count Waldstein hosted an extraordinary event: the meeting of the sovereigns of the Holy Alliance, i.e. the Austrian emperor Francis I., Tsar Nicholas I. and the Prussian crown prince Frederick William. On this occasion, the Estates Theatre company from Prague performed in the new palace theatre. This 1833 theatre has been preserved, complete with its simple stage technology, part of the original lighting, the stage decorations and a large collection of costumes. It was opened to the public in 1999 after a restoration campaign. Part of the guided tour of the theatre is a new exhibition commemorating the meeting of the Holy Alliance, also featuring some of the theatrical costumes and props.

PRAGUE

The theatres have an important place in the long list of Prague monuments. The Neo-Renaissance building of the National Theatre (J. Zitek, 1881, after fire J. Schulz, 1883) has been a declaration of the Czech national life since the beginning, and the best artists of the day participated in designing its rich decoration. A monument of German theatre was the present day State Opera (initially New German Theatre, later Smetana's Theatre), a building by the Viennese architects F. Fellner and H. Helmer (1887). The Karln Musical Theatre with an opulent auditorium in Neo-Baroque style (Theatre Variété, 1881, alteration 1897) follows the tradition of operetta theatre, whereas the Vinohrady Theatre (1907) is mainly dedicated to drama. An eyewitness of more than two centuries of Prague theatre life is the oldest theatre building in the city, the “Estates Theatre”.

PRAGUE

Estates Theatre

One of the oldest European theatres operating continuously since its inauguration. It was constructed in 1781–1783 by the imperial court architect Anton Haffenecker for count Franz Anton Nostitz-Rieneck, the most important royal official in Bohemia. The theatre opened on 21st April of 1783 as “Count Nostitz National Theatre.” After being sold to the estates, the theatre was renamed “Estates Theatre” in 1798; it also carried other names before it returned to this one in 1791. Mozart created two operas for Prague which premiered in this theatre: “Don Giovanni” (1787) and “La Clemenza di Tito” (1791). In 1859, one storey was added to the building and an extra gallery in the now higher auditorium; in 1882, the auditorium was redecorated in the present style. Since 1920, the Estates Theatre has been the second stage of the National Theatre.

VIENNA

Vienna is the city of music and theatre. The two most famous theatres, the State Opera (1869) and the Burgtheater (1888), feature richly decorated late 19th century facades, staircases and foyers, but the auditoria date from the 1950s. The Volkstheater (1889), a playhouse, and the Ronacher (1872) where musicals are performed, were designed by the great Austrian architects Fellner & Helmer. The oldest theatre in Austria, Maria Theresia's palace theatre (1747/1767) at Schönbrunn Palace, is not open to visitors, whereas the Austrian Theatre Museum behind the State Opera is welcoming you. More musicals are presented in the Raimund Theatre (1893), whereas the Volksoper (1898) and the “Theater an der Wien” are dedicated to opera and occasionally operetta.

VIENNA

Theater an der Wien

The “Theater an der Wien” was commissioned by Emanuel Schikaneder, Mozart's librettist and first Papageno, in 1801. For the next 200 years, it was the focus of the most important achievements in Austrian theatre. Beethoven's “Fidelio”, Nestroy's popular comedies with songs, the masterworks of the Golden and the Silver Operetta (e.g. “The Bat” by Strauß and “The Merry Widow” by Lehár) and finally the Austrian long-running musicals “Elisabeth” and “Mozart”—they all had their world premiere here. The auditorium presents itself in a design from around 1840, with a richly painted curtain from 1864. Since 2006, the “Theater an der Wien” has been dedicated to opera again, showing unusual opera productions all year round in a stagione system.

WEITRA

Palace Theatre

Not far from the Austrian-Czech border the town of Weitra sits on a hill. It was built 1201–1208 by Hadmar II of Kuenring as a castle and town complex. Around 1600 the castle was transformed into a Renaissance palace by the imperial architect Pietro Ferrabosco. Here one can spend a whole day, wandering through the palace museum, the brewery museum, the permanent exhibition on the Iron Curtain and: the palace theatre. The Fürstenberg family, who has been residing here since 1606, built the theatre already in the 18th century. In 1885, Count Eduard Egon of Fürstenberg gave it its present form. It is a typical rectangular hall theatre with a royal box at the far end, elegantly decorated in shades of white and gold by the Viennese architect A. Führer. Also worth seeing are the historic town centre, the medieval city walls and the textile museum.
